Structured Wiring

You probably wouldn't think twice about living in a home without indoor plumbing a few years from now, a home without structured wiring may be just as obsolete. Structured wiring is a process of built-in connections to support digital video, voice and data systems.

Many of the electronics and systems already in your home today would benefit from being interconnected from room to room. These connections include:

- Telephone
- Intercom
- Computer/Data
- Television
- Whole House Audio
- Much, Much More!

"One of the most labor-saving inventions of today is tomorrow"

The importance of structured wiring goes far beyond what it allows you to connect now. The key is in what it will allow you to do in the future.

When your home has a structured wiring system in place, there's no need to re-wire when you add new systems, services, electronics or other devices. Your home will already be wired to accommodate additional cameras, telephones, PCs, televisions, or many other devices yet to be developed.
